ANNUAL REPORT

—OF—

The Superintendent of Schools

—OF THE—

TOWN OF PLAINFIELD, CONN.,

JULY, 1913.

TO THE TOWN SCHOOL COMMITTEE.

Gentlemen:—

I herewith submit to you the Eighth Annual Report of the Superintendent of Schools.

The year just closed has been a year of marked growth in our schools. Under the subject of Attendance a detailed account of the numerical growth is given, but the schools have progressed in many ways besides an increase in numbers. Teachers and Superintendent have been in more frequent consultation than in previous years. Direct efforts have been made to interest the parents of the children in the schools, and thus to bring the school and the home into closer relations. Attention has been given to the educational progress made in other sections of the country, and interest developed in the efforts to make the schools more nearly meet the demands of present day conditions. Courses of study in geography and history have been revised; a new course of study has been made for the High School; a study of methods and forms for profitable busy work in the lower grades has been made; attention has been paid to the work with backward and deficient pupils; the new building at Plainfield and the new building at Black Hill have been occupied, the rural schools have been brought up to a better standing, and along many lines the general work of the schools has progressed to a more marked degree than in previous years.

This report will be divided into the following topics: Attendance, Teachers, Educational Needs and Tendencies, Vocational and Industrial Training, The High School, The Schools and The Community. While this report is in no sense meant to formulate definite plans nor make ultimate conclusions, it is inspired by the hope that it may lead to a deeper interest in the effect the schools have upon the vital welfare of the community. If it does no more than stir up dormant ideas in the minds of our citizens, and stirs them into an active and friendly interest it will have served its purpose. But if it results in opening the way to making the schools serve the community more effectually it will need no apology.

Attendance.

This year our schools have increased in attendance in all grades. In October, 1911, there were enumerated in town 1,493 children between the ages of four and sixteen. In October, 1912, our enumeration was 1,560, an increase of 67. There have been 1,279 different pupils registered during the year, with an average term registration of 1,212, an increase of 172. Average attendance increased from 846 to 1,032, or 186, while average membership increased from 898 in 1911-'12 to 1,098 in 1912-'13, an increase of just 200.

We occupy for our grades thirty-three different rooms, located in thirteen different buildings, the value of buildings, and equipments belonging to the town approximating $70,000.

The number of pupils registered by grades with the average age for each grade follows:

Grade.	No. Registered.	Average Age of Pupils.
1	327	6.6
2	257	8.8
3	154	9.4
4	180	11.2
5	98	11.8
6	86	12.3
7	62	13.4
8	29	13.7

As will be seen there is a steady loss of pupils after the second year, the greatest difference appearing between the second and third and the fourth and fifth years. This loss is accounted for partly by failures and partly by pupils who were over the age for their grade when they came to us from other places and who became sixteen years old before entering the fifth grade.

The small number of pupils who complete their grammar school course is a matter which should seriously concern every member of this community. While it may not be possible to entirely overcome this tendency of pupils to leave school the moment the law allows it is possible to do more than we are now doing for these pupils before they leave school and it is also possible to provide for their further education after they become wage-earners, as will be discussed under the head of vocational and industrial training.

Connecticut has probably as good a Child Labor Law as is to be found in any State, and it is fairly well administered, but it is a recognized fact that law alone will not take the place of constructive education. At best it is but a minor safeguard to be applied in the absence of any better or more effective course. The 24,883 half-days absence by the pupils in our schools and the 869 tardy marks recorded are not wholly due to the lack of a proper administration of the law nor to the lack of interest in school work. Illness, either of the children or of other members of the family, accounts for a large portion, and bespeaks the need of better attention to the health of the community as a whole and the health of the school in particular. Regular medical inspection is the most important means for the conserving of the health of the school and should be made a part of our system. Sanitation, ventilation, water supply, and general oversight of the child's health, should be brought up to date in the Town of Plainfield, just as quickly and as carefully as should our courses of study and educational methods. No one can dispute that regular attendance and good health are as essential to successful school work as they are to success in business.

Teachers.

Forty teachers are engaged to teach the schools in the Town of Plainfield the coming year. Fourteen of these are teachers who have not taught in this town previously. In addition to these five teachers who taught in town last year are to teach in different positions in town the coming year. The supply of teachers is totally inadequate to the demand. In the report of the Commissioner of Education, Washington, D. C., Mr. Claxton says: "It is seldom recognized how inadequate the supply of teachers for American schools really is. There were last year about 25,000 graduates of teacher-training courses in colleges and normal schools in the United States. It is found by the Bureau of Education that the average length of employment is less than five years. With a total teaching force of about 450,000, this means that not more than one in five of the teachers actually employed is professionally trained, even on a minimum basis. The first step in educational progress is the recognition by the State of its direct obligations; once these are recognized in the form of ample financial support where such has hitherto been withheld, the public school system of a particular section will improve sufficiently to make the national showing for education more nearly what it should be."

Plainfield is at a disadvantage with the smaller towns of the State. The average attendance grant which these towns receive enables them to pay higher wages to their teachers and to secure better teachers because of the higher wage. It is difficult to secure an adequate supply of trained teachers for this town. It is impossible to retain teachers for any considerable period unless they are contented to remain because of their nearness to their homes. It is unquestionable that we must gradually pay higher salaries or be forced to take untrained and inefficient teachers. The fourteen teachers elected this year were selected from a list of nearly 100 candidates nearly three-fourths of which was made up of girls lacking training or experience or both. That we have thus far been able to maintain a creditable force of teachers is due to the high standard of our schools and the ease with which a teacher who is successful here can go at once to a city school at a much higher salary than we can pay. In other words Plainfield is acting as a training school for the cities of Connecticut and the adjoining States.

Educational Needs and Tendencies.

It is apparent at a glance that there is a marked change in the purpose of public school education. The demand for vocational subjects represents no more call for different school subjects as such, but a complete transformation in the idea of what the public schools should do. When public education was first introduced in this country it represented an extension of the educational facilities already at hand to wider circles of the population. It was no time to consider whether the type of education that had served to make cultured gentlemen of those who had wealth and leisure was equally adaptable to the work of educating "all the children of all the people." The early public school men were concerned with the task of extending the benefits of education, not with changing it. They believed in it; they themselves were the product of it. They saw the vital need for enlightenment, and they knew but one type of education to use to produce it.

But conditions of American life have changed radically in the past hundred years, and the whole basis of educational purpose has shifted to meet changing needs.

Throughout the country there is a growing body of people who feel that the schools are still teaching the children of all the people by a process never designed for that end. Those who criticise the bookish curriculum of the schools, whether elementary or high, are really striving for what they conceive to be the changed purpose of public education: To reach all the children of all the people with the kind of training that will make them not merely intelligent in respect to things that are in books, but will equip them directly for the kind of life, economic and social, which they will lead when they leave school; this is their belief and it is rapidly becoming a common faith.

The community is concerned with getting for its schools the best possible educational advantages possible, therefore it is beginning to insist upon a most thorough health supervision, to demand constructive programs that will keep its school system as completely as possible up to the community's altered standards and shifting demands; to manifest a noteworthy open-mindedness toward new ideas and new plans; to open wide the avenues of information so that the people may have accurate knowledge of the work of education as it is carried on in their schools. Let the citizens of this town be forehanded in this respect as is their reputation in financial affairs. Not to do so is to neglect a portion of our civic life which intimately touches the majority of homes in the community and vitally concerns the future welfare of our commonwealth.

Vocational and Industrial Education.

The movement for vocational training in the public schools is now at its crisis in this country. The vocational principle is fully acknowledged and there are more or less complete systems of vocational and industrial training in operation in half a dozen States and in numerous cities. There are constant demands from all sources for the extension of the system. Plainfield in common with all other industrial communities feels the need of a closer correlation of school with industrial life. With the great majority of our pupils leaving school before the completion of the sixth grade or at the end of that grade, it is evident that the industries call louder and more appealingly to them than does the school; yet they are totally unfitted for any of the occupations which they take up. It is not advocated that only such things should be taught in school as shall have a direct value on the work children will take up as soon as they leave, but that industrial training should be a part of the school curriculum and should go hand in hand with other school subjects.

We should begin at once in every grade to do something toward giving definite instruction and practice in practical subjects. Teaching girls to sew and giving even the most rudimentary instruction in home economics, and teaching boys the use of tools and simple machinery unfailingly has its effect upon the economic life of the community. Conversely many a boy who cannot or who will not learn from books is given just the right incentive to study when tools are placed in his hands and he is given something definite to accomplish with them.

In our own schools young children in the first grade who could not seem to learn to read and who could not at first add two and two correctly have taken the greatest interest in the work of measuring, paper-cutting, and simple designing with colored sticks, pegs, papers and crayons. The exhibit of the manual work in our lower grades given last winter points the way to what may be done if the work is carried along in succeeding grades. For the dull, backward, or mentally deficient child it is imperatively necessary that this course should be pursued.

For all children it is of the highest importance in a town like Plainfield that instruction in machinery, and the processes employed in producing cloth from wool and some definite knowledge of cotton, and the other manufacturing industries of the town should be given in our schools.

The High School.

Much of what has been said regarding vocational training applies forcibly to the need of pupils of high school age. The high schools were originally not designed as institutions to train all the children of all the people for different tasks in life, but to furnish what was formerly considered educationally necessary for those who were able to afford it.

The problem of the curriculum at the present time is often stated as the question of "practical or cultural." Theoretically, of course, all subjects are, or ought to be, both vocational and cultural. Every subject, however remotely connected with real life, is expected to help the pupil in his future, or it would not be in the curriculum. It is really not a question of excluding certain subjects because they are not vocational and adding others because they are; it is really the problem of emphasis—of using those subjects which will provide the greatest benefit to society. Educators do not fail to appreciate the "practical" as well as the cultural values of Latin, for instance, but they feel that there are other subjects more immediately necessary for the public welfare that are not only practical but "cultural," in the best sense. Emphasis is needed upon the "cultural" value of the so-called practical subjects. The merely book-taught boy has much to learn, from a purely cultural standpoint, of the boy who knows how to use his hands. Something in the modern school must, sooner or later, achieve genuine sentiment in behalf of all labor, whether of the head or hands.

It is more evident each year that the work of the town high school is far from being concerned solely or even largely with the preparation of pupils for college. Instruction is now given in many high schools in agriculture, in domestic science, in normal methods of teaching, in manual training, and in general business practice. If we are to properly serve the boys and girls of this community, if we are to give the right incentive to many who never think of going to high school under present conditions, and to many others who never finish their high school course, we must get in line with the best of educational methods and experiences of other places. We should have not alone a college preparatory course, or a course of general instruction, but we should add such special courses and subjects as will contribute to the education of those pupils who will end their school life when they leave our schools, and will be of direct benefit to them from an economic standpoint, and will thus, indirectly raise the standard of efficiency in our economic and industrial life.

To do this, however, a new high school building is necessary. Our present quarters are inadequate to our present needs. Eight years has witnessed a remarkable growth in this school, both in numbers and in usefulness. We must not nullify this growth, nor hamper the progress which the school should make. Its value and place in the community should be undisputed, and I trust that the time is very near when the demand shall be made from all parts of the town that a suitable building be erected and that the boys and girls of this town be given the advantages so justly their due and that the town itself take its rightful place as a leader in educational affairs. With commodious quarters and with an enriched and inspiring curriculum there is no question as to the continued growth of the school.

The Schools and the Community.

The history of American progress is indissolubly united with the history of the American public school. The need for education went hand in hand with the desire for religious liberty. Hence from the earliest times the school has been a vital factor in the community. The ideas and ideals of the present day are taught, fostered and promulgated for the benefit of future generations through the medium of the public school to-day, even more largely than they were fifty or one hundred years ago. But our present life is a busy one. We live more largely, if not as wisely as did our forefathers. The complexity of modern life leads to a greater differentiation of the responsibility we have for the welfare of the coming generations. Too often the parents are so busied with the economic problems and duties that the instruction of their offspring in moral, ethical and physical things is left to the church and the school or is neglected altogether. There is almost no direct relations between the home and the school, no co-operation, no understanding of each by either, and the child lives, as it were in two different environments.

This is partly the fault of the home and partly the fault of the school, and it must be remedied before either home or school can do all that is possible for the child.

The teacher should know what the home life and conditions are of each of her pupils just as surely as the parent should know and understand the ideals, methods and purposes of the school. There should be constant sympathetic co-operation the one with the other, with the sole thought of both, the highest welfare of the child. Parents should visit the school. Teachers should visit the home. No rules and regulations, no course of study, however well planned, no methods that find their motive in the brain and not in the heart will ever take the place of a sympathetic, whole-souled personal interest in the individual child.

An interested community, that is a community so actively interested that all the people shall know what is being done in the schools and shall stand ready to forward every movement that looks toward a higher standard of educational efficiency is bound to be a noteworthy community, and is sure to develop a high moral, social and economic standard of life.

Respectfully submitted,

J. L. CHAPMAN.
